PROGRAM DESCRIPTION:

PowerPoint was made for presentations. But what might we do differently to maintain the attention of our audience? By the end of this meeting, you will know:

- What an “Annoying PowerPoint Survey” identifies as the top three things that annoy people the most about bad PowerPoint presentations
- What percentage of the population is color blind and why you should consider the visual limitations of your audience when creating presentations
- What Japanese researches who study fruit flies have discovered about the effective use of color visuals
- What you can do differently - starting tomorrow - to communicate visually with your entire audience, including people who may be color blind

OUR SPEAKERS:

- Barbara King is the Training Program Coordinator at the Department of Public Health where she coordinates and delivers the Leadership curriculum and Emergency Preparedness programs.
